Black Career Women's Network (BCWN) is a national black-owned career development organization dedicated to fostering the professional growth of African-American Women. The purpose of the BCWN is to be a supportive element while bridging the gap of support in professional development, mentor access, and leadership training. Also, BCWN provides career tools, resources, and a strong network to help you strategically manage your career, navigate the workplace and thrive professionally. This national black-owned career development organization believes: Whether you are in an entry-level or c-suite position, an entrepreneur or a celebrity, all of us are Black Career Women. Career Empowerment begins when you gain clarity of who you are professionally and believing in the value of your worth. Changing the perceptions and stereotypes of how Black Women are perceived in and out of the workplace. In pulling back the layers of fear and negative self-beliefs to build confidence that you can define your own career path. In talking about challenging workplace issues that can delay you from reaching your full potential.
